Equipment

Metro flies the internationally popular 19-seat de Havilland Twin Otter, a jet engined (propeller) STOL aircraft operated by a Captain and First Officer. STOL stands for Shortfield Take-off and Landing. STOL airplanes take off and land in less than one fifth the runway distances of conventional airliners. Metro's planes arrive and depart at Intercontinental on a special STOL landing strip close-in to the terminal. Traffic controllers separate STOL aircraft from conventional aircraft using main runways, thereby eliminating possible delays on take-off or landing due to airport terminal congestion.
